Dear Regional Planners,

I endorse Sustainable TamAlmonte's comment letter on Plan Bay Area Update 2017. I think that in your regional planning and population forecasting models, much greater attention should be given to available resource supplies---specifically, food and water. We should not plan for more new residents than resources can accommodate. Period. Otherwise, in twenty-five years, we'll all be in a world of hurt. Think responsibly with the needs of current Bay Area residents uppermost in mind. If you do that, you assuredly will be tasked with redoing your growth figures and downsizing them in accordance with science-based studies on how much population growth the land can support.

Sincerely,
Peter Hensel
